Image

Indians told us how tornado never struck
a place two rivers meet.

There, after the roar, my fingers mere shreds coiling

through a chain-link fence, I gaze up to a slice of sunlight through green broils of sky and a woman hanging from a black tree by brilliant

hair. I can't forget, nor,
now, will you.